Dr. Jones is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Health, Behavior and Society at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health and a core faculty member of the Johns Hopkins Center for Injury Research and Policy. Her research agenda has focused on psychosocial and environmental factors and their impact on the burden of injuries among vulnerable populations. She investigates both intentional and unintentional injury risk factors, specifically those that increase risk of severe disability or death. Through her training and research experiences, she has an understanding of the social environment's impact on behaviors and developed skills to identify critical factors for positive behavior modification. Dr. Jones received her BS in Health Education from Bowling Green State University, her MPH from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill from the Department of Health Behavior and Health Education and her PhD from the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health from the Department of Health, Behavior and Society. She is currently investigating strategies that reduce violence among urban adolescents and motor vehicle crashes among older adults.
